Perugia was founded by the Umbrian and between the VI and the V century Before Christ was populated by the Etruscans, in expansion towards the Tyrrhenian Sea. It is transmitted that after the tragic defeat suffered by the Romans at Lake Trasimeno, they took refuge in Perugia and increased their population. After the fall of the Roman Empire Perugia, like many other cities in central Italy suffered the barbarian invasions. Later, Perugia accepted the protection of the Pontiffs, but not the lordship. Otherwise, they ruled Perugia until 1859, when inhabitants of Perugia expelled the papal legate and established a provisional Regency Committee. Pius IX troops resumed the Pope's control, but a year later, on September 14th 1860, the people from Perugia joined the rest of Italy.

Located north of Rome, in central Italy, Perugia offers all the advantages of a large city without sharing metropolitan problems: there is an airport that can be reached in less than 20 minutes, traffic is not intense and the search for parking is not spasmodic as in the metropolis, thanks also to a modern Minimetro. A mobile escalator system connects car parks to the city center. Characteristic is the path of the escalators inside the Rocca Paolina, a fortress built between 1540 and 1543 by the will of Pope Paul III and, until 1860, a symbol of papal power over the city. The various faculties are close to the city center, and also to the University of Perugia, founded in 1308 with the papal bull of Pope Clement V, followed in 1355 by the Diplomas of Emperor Charles IV: Perugia is a university campus in all respects. Perugia is also home to the oldest and most prestigious University for foreigners. On the outskirts, well served by public transport, is the area of Pian di Massiano where, in addition to the stadium and the sport palace, there are jogging tracks, skating rinks, slopes bicycles and basketball fields. For lovers of city life, Corso Vannucci is a meeting place and the city centre offers art places, such as the National Gallery of Umbria, established in the second half of the 16th century, and leisure like the Morlacchi theater, inaugurated in 1781.

The ECVPH Annual Scientific Conference and AGM 2018 therefore, will be part of a context that has always been a stage of the perfect blend of science and culture. The organizing committee hopes that event in this opportunity will enable the participation of qualified speakers, all of internationally renowned, to offer ideas and stimuli to the participants.

We like to salute you with a sentence by Barnabas Suebu, governor of the Indonesian province Papua until 2011 and “Hero of the Environment” for the Times magazine in 2007:
